

Mockup Review Notes

Hi Jade!

I love what you have done with the site thus far! I think you have done a wonderful job of capturing the look and feel of the auroras with your design choices (I think the dark green background is working great and the glowing text for the header ☺)

I'm going to leave a list of suggestions here, mostly for slight design changes that I think will help with clarity and with building the site responsively. (the home page is looking great, so I'd definitely build it as is!)

1. For each of the other pages, I'd increase the font size of the heading to give it more emphasis and have it on its own line above the rest of the content. (this will happen naturally when you code it as a h1 or h2 element)
2. For the characteristics and causes pages, I understand the impulse to create two columns for the larger screen sizes but I honestly think that it will save you a lot of work when you create responsive styles to have one column of text with the photos in between like the other two pages on the desktop version as well. (This will also make the reading experience a little easier so that the viewer won't have to scroll up and down the page to get to the top of each column)
3. I would have the last page be the same color as the other two pages for consistency. If you wanted to incorporate another background color, I might do it on the home page rather than the sources page.
4. I know that this does not apply in the still mockup, but I would have some sort of active state on each menu item when you are on that page. (maybe it has a glow when you are on that page) (when you are on home page, the home page part of the nav glows, when you are on the characteristics page the characteristics part glows, etc. etc.) I think Abe and James will demo this or discussed it in the last class session.

Have fun! Hope you have a wonderful Thanksgiving! It's looking great!!
