

Notes from HTML Review

Hi Jade!

So sorry that this is coming to you so late. (the ~suffering~ of this final stretch of studio projects is really hitting at the moment as you know lsdkfjalks)

Amazing job building the site thus far! It is looking so wonderful! There are a few technical/functionality notes I have, but other than that the design feels very consistent and your responsive sizes look great!

On the navigation:

- Have the “transition” on the regular “a” elements rather than on “a:hover”. This will allow the transition to be smooth both when you hover and when you move your mouse away. Right now there is an awkward jump when I move my mouse off each elemt.
- I like that you have created an active state for each tag with the all uppercase, but I might have the active state be the purple color to make each tag still feel and look consistent.
- The scale shift is creating a shift of the elements to the left. I might make the scale shift less pronounced so that it feels a little less jarring.
- I think the nav could benefit from increasing the padding between each a tag to create more breathing room.

The only other note I would add is to increase the padding/margin between each page title like “causes” and the header area. Right now it feels a little too tight.

Such a wonderful job!
